

Adaptation of the established activities of The Polish Teachers Association to the new political ideals in education in the People's Republic of Poland

Summary

This article discusses issues of educational activities of the Polish Teachers Association during Polish limited sovereignty. The author focuses it on issues concerning adaptation of the organization to the new political conditions after the Second World War. Particular attention is focused on the release mechanism of the ideological foundations of the union and the submission of its educational activities to the state government policy. This issue is analyzed on the basis of the programs implemented by this organization, its form, and the content it provided for teachers.